

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a method of increasing the live weight of poultry through the administration of a plasma product to the poultry through the animals' feed and/or water. The product is effective in increasing the live weight of poultry. The product is also surprisingly effective in increasing the yield of white meat to the detriment of dark meat.